Accessibility

We want the Acorns Early website to be accessible to everyone. We aim to be transparent, clear and easy to understand, so that you can see who we are, what we offer and how to use and navigate our site.

Here are the features we have implemented to make our website fully accessible:

Language

We aim to keep it plain, simple and straightforward, avoiding jargon and using appropriate explanations.

Text

We use clear and legible text and fonts. You can find out how to change the size of text to make it easier to read, as well as make other useful changes in your browser, by visiting the World Wide Web Consortium's website.

Screen

We have used color contrasts that ensure the website can be read by those with visual impairments. We have limited the use of Flash and other applications that are known to cause screen flicker. Links are displayed clearly in a stronger color and if you roll over a link with your computer mouse the link will be underlined.

Optimization for screen readers

We continue to make improvements so that our website works well with screen readers. Screen readers are a tool which will translate the words on the site into sound, and read it aloud for you. We welcome any feedback from our users to highlight where this can be improved.

The Future

We are continually looking for ways to improve the site and to make it even more accessible. In the future, we hope to add more features which will make the site even easier to use (such as alternative stylesheets). These improvements will give users the ability to alter the presentation of each site page to suit reading needs, including changing the size of text to help partially sighted readers.
